Through the courtesy of Messrs, Charles Scribner's Sons, The Sun is enabled to lay be-fore its readers to-day an abstract of a paper by Mr. John Bigelow outlining what the Tilden Trust Library may be. The paper appears in Scribner's Magazine for September. Mr. Bigelow begins by denouncing the de-cision of the Court of Appeals, which has "robbed the citizens of New York of has "robbed the citizens of New York of some five millions of dollars, because Mr. Tilden reposed more confidence in his executors than the law permits. RISE AND FALL OF AN ACTOR. COMEDIAN DABOLL'S FINE TRIUMPH AND SAD FAILURE.

When, After Years of Flodding, He Was Surprised by Success He Found a Life of Conviviality Thrust Upon Him Which He Was Unable to Keep Within Bonnds.

On the upper and lower Rialtos, at the Players', Lambs', and Five A's clubs, wherever the player folk met, little else was talked of yesterday but the life and the suicide of "Billy" Daboll, who poisoned himself on Monday at Holliston. Mass. But it was not only the players who talked of the comedian, for thousands of New Yorkers knew him. as an audience knows a player, and they remembered how Daboll had convulsed them with laughter only a few years ago, and wondered why such a very happy seeming man should have found life unendur-able.

"It was his success that killed him." That was what Manager Barton of the Casino said, and an old, placid, white-haired player said much the same thing, but in these words: Billy Daboll had never made a sensational hit; if he had remained like hundreds of us, trustworthy, commonplace actors, whose names are forgotten by the theatregoer as soon as he takes his eyes off the playbill, he would now probably be living, contented enough, in a Harlem flat."

Daboll entered the profession by the front door, as the actors' saying goes. Up in Provi-dence, where he was born and educated, he was the delight of fashionable society as an amateur actor. His father, head of the Dabell Manufacturing Company, was a well-to-do man and the son was received into the city's inner society circle. He was tireless in organizing amateur troupes, and was one of the best players in the companies he organized.

About fifteen years ago young Daboll came to New York, and began earning a living by acting and singing. Financial affairs at home, it is said, made self-support necessary. There must have been some more impelling motive than the love of art, for he had so hard a DABOLL AS BAVENNES. struggle for eight or nine years that there were times when he was glad to sleep late in the morning and forget that there was no breakfast to be had. In 1885 he made a mild success at the Fourteenth Street Theatre in a farce called, "Are You Insured?" It was enough of a success to attract attention from the Broadway theatres, and resulted in his enragement by the Casino. In the early spring of 1880 "Erminie" was rehearsed. Daboll receiving the part of the swaggering thief, Rarenner, and Francis Wilson the part of Cadeaux. One player said yesterday: "It was sup-posed that Wilson had all the 'fat;' that Daboll had only a utility part, a character to make a background for Wilson."

After weeks of rehearsal Daboll, on the very afternoon of the opening night, deciared that he could do nothing with the part, and positively refused to appear. It almost required force refused to appear. It almost required force to get him to the theatre. Those who were at to get him to the theatre. Those who were at the Casino on that May night in 1889 saw what some theatrical people now assert to have been one of the few instantaneous and tremendous successes in the record of cemic opera in the city. The feature of the success was the performance of Racennes, by Daboll. It was a typical first-night audience, which is not overmuch given to enthusiasm. but it "rose at " Daboil almost from the moment he swaggered down to the front, half dragging the terrified and cringing Caddy latter him. Daboil could sing too, and, after their duct. "Downy Jail Birds of a Feather." the recalls tired the two men out. Daboil did not then comprehend his hit. He honesity thought the applause was

Alarge, cold bottle and a small hot bird, as sung by Eugeno Field. Drinking—hard and late drinking—soon became a habit with Daboli, but it was not until the second year of the run of "Erminio" that it began to interfere with his performance.

"He was very popular with every one connected with the theatre," said one of the employees of the Casino vesterday," and when he came to a performance with one of his "still lags on every one on the stage would help
to conceal the last from the management."

But after a time at the rame necessary to resort to familiar stage tricks to conceal flacenness condition from the audience, for he appeared more fromently and more noticeably confused. Another thing was happening to detract from the preat success of Daboli.
Francis Wilson, from the first pegformance to the last, was working, hard to maprove the part of Cadeaus, and little by little he gained for himself applause which had at first cil
gone to Karennes.

Dabol played out the wenderful run of two years, going on the road part of the time, while Mark Smith played facenness at the Casino, and at the end of the run. May, 1888, he left the company. He was going, he said, to perfect a new kind of railroad switch, which he had done some descripty work on, but at the expiration of a year he returned to the Casino, and accepted an engagement to play the leading part in "The biggants. The management hesitated some about engaging him.
He attended rehearsals regularly until two weeks he are the date of the opening, and then suddenly and mysteriously disappeared.

Ed Stevens was engaged for the abandoned
part, and played if.

For a year Daboli dropped almost entirely from public notice, only occasional flems appearing in the papers of his continued "eccentricities," and then he went to Chicago and played a senson in extravagenza, under the management of David Henderson. Last winter Daboli reappeared in this city and sought

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT. Puzzling Questions that the Secretary of the Treasury Must Deelde, WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—Treasury officials are encountering many complex questions growing out of the enforcement of the Chinese Ex-clusion act. To-day a question came before the Secretary of the Treasury involving the citizenship of two young Chinese who came to this country when they were only five years old. They came with their parents, and, after living in this country several years, returned to their native home, leaving their father and mother on this side. They now desire to come back to America to live without being obliged to comply with the regulations prescribed in the existing law. The Secretary decides that they are not exempt from the provisions of the law.

they are not exempt from the provisions of the law.

A similar question arose a few days ago in connection with two Chinese boys who were born in this country. Their mother was taken ill and she went back to China, accompanied by her two sons. After remaining in China until the mother died, the bors decided that they would like to come to America. Upon their arrival here they were detained in accordance with the existing statutes. An appeal was made to the Treasury Department and the Secretary decided that they were attended to citizenship.

Another question which puzzles some of the strict constructionists of the department arises from the fact that a number of Chinese have isnded in Canada and Mexico and become naturalized as Canadians or Mexicans prior to entry into the United States. There are not many cases of this kind on record, but the subject is now under consideration by the law officers of the department. Under the existing treaties with freat Britain and Moxico, it is difficult to understand how Chinese can be excluded after they have become citizens of those countries.

Studying Our Navat Establishment.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—Count Alfred Dietrich, chief constructor of the Germany navy, who is in this country for the purpose of making a study of our naval establishment, was at the Navy Department to-day. The department is extending to Mr. Dietrich all courtesies possible. He will visit the navy yards of the United States and the works of all private firms doing work for the Government. He will leave Wash-ington for Norfelk Navy Yard to-night. He expects to devote about three weeks to this inspection.

Capt. Hichborn, acting chief constructor of the United States navy, visited Germany last year and made an inspection of the German navy, at which time courtesies were extended him similar to those now being shown Count Dietrich.

officers of the United States receiving ship Minnesota, lying at the foot of East Fifticth street, are greatly stirred up over an article in the World on Sunday, in which alleged cruelties to young apprentices on the training ships are vividly described by one who claims to have made a trip abroad as an apprentice on the New Hampshire. To the Editor of The Sun-Sir: An article in the World of last Sunday purporting to describe a boy's life in the United States navy is such a tissue of misrepresentations and false-hoods that we owe it to ourselves and to the service to expose its untruth. service to expose its untruth. So full is the article of misrepresentation that it could have been concocted only through malice and with the unpatriotic purpose of injuring the service. It is because the malicious libel is calculated to discourage boys from enlisting in the navy and, by thus lessening the number of skilled seamen, impair the efficiency of the service in time of war that we deem it our duty to contradict some of the more slanderous statements.

If the logal maxim, false in one, false in all, is to prevail, you can judge how utterly untruck the article is when it is composed in large part of a description of a voyage made by the New Hampshire which never took place! The proposed structure, Mr. Higelow now says in parentheses, need not be built at first of its fullest dimensions. The stoms and arms of the cross might be reduced one-half, providing the proportions were preserved and still give the adequate accommodations for many years. When more room came to be required, the building could be extended in accordance with the plan.

One of the advantages which Beyent Park on of the advantages which Bryant Park has over other sites for the library, Mr. Bigelow thinks, is one of an economical character. The reservoir, now or soon to be no longer a necessity, will not long be allowed to cumber the ground after it has outlived its usefulness. When it is taken down to make room for the Tilden library building. the 800,000 cubic yards of stone, plaster, &c., it contains could be used in the construction of the proposed library and the terrace which is to surround it. The library walls, except the exterior facing, could be built from the material thus obtained, while the old plaster of the reservoir would supply sand enough to furnish all the mortar that would be required. The saving of the cost of quarrying and carring the stone and sand required for such a structure as is contemplated, even if the stone in the quarry cost nothing, render Bryant Park eligible beyond any other possible site. As to the time when the reservoir can be spared by the city being too remote and indefinite to be allowed to enter into the calculations of the Tilden trustees, Mr. Bigelow acknowledges that persons whose judgment should be respected believe that the reservoir should always be preserved to meet the disastrous possibilities to which great cities are ever subject. He does not, however, propose to take into consideration their opinion. He has discussed the subject, he says, on the presumption that the municipal Government seriously entertains the purpose of dispensing with the reservoir as no longer a necessity to the city.

Mrs. Steiner Married the Advertiser, and in New Very Serry.

Lima, O., Aug. 23.—Several months ago Mrs. Sarah Steiner, a wealthy widow, answered an advertisement in a Toledo matrimonial paper, and, as a result, was married to M. F. Munson. and, as a result, was married to M. F. Munson, who represented himself as a well-to-do business man of Sherwood, O. After their marriage Munson asked her to mortgage her property, which she consented to do. Her husband left her, and she has not heard of him since, lie took the money secured by the mortgage with him. She has found that he has five wives, and that he is a counterfeiter. When Munson first called on Mrs. Steiner he flashed $1.800 before her as a part of the ante-nuptial contract, and showed her letters from bankers all over the country. These letters, Mrs. Munson has discovered, were forgeries.

Five Women Lost Over Night on Mt. Adams. JACKSON, N. H., Aug. 23.-Five women lost their way on Mount Adams last week, and all their way on Mount Adams last week, and all are now ill with nervous prostration. One of them, Mrs. Lucy W. Bradley, has gone to her home in West Newbury, Mass., critically ill as a result of her fright and exposure. The ladies started out with the intention of crossing the Presidential range. They had a guide, but lost their way, and wandered mile after mile in the forests until dark, Mrs. Ifradley falling and spraining her knee. This delayed the party, and they camped in a damp and lonely place on the side of Mount Adams. In the morning they started to retrace their steps, and after several hours of struggle succeeded!

to devote a portion of the park to a free library, to be equipped and operated at the city's expense: but Mr. Tilden, having other views as to the proposed benefaction, withheld his cooperation, and the bill falled to pass. A more recent bill to erect a new municipal building in Bryant Park failed hecause of the inconvenience of removing the judicial and administrative offices so far up town. The objection that the erection of a large atructure would deprive the city of a needed breathing place. Mr. Bigelow thinks, would not apply to the structure the Tilden frustees propose to erect, which would rather increase than restrict the present park accommodation. A plan of a structure in the shape of a cross which was proposed too into for adoption for the National Library at Washington was approved by Mr. Tilden when it was submitted as most suitable for the purpose intended. If this plan, somewhat elaborated, were adopted with Bryant Park, the best possible selection that could be made for a site, the upper part of the cross would is toward Frith avenue, while the arms would extoard Frith avenue, the lower and longer toward Sixth avenue, while the arms would extoard for the singular from north in the city of the stacking of books, will free north in the city of the stacking of books, will free north be about 40 to 10 feet.

Double-faced shelves perpendicular to the wall, for the stacking of books, will free north sides of every part of the building not otherwise appropriated. These stacks of shelves on the lower floor would be about three feet shorter than the stack immediately below it, to leave the space of a nerve washing and leaving an open passage in the centre for the circulation of the public of from ten to fitteen feet. The shelves on the next and succeeding floors would recede as they rose, and each upper stack would be about three feet shorter than the stack so the lower floor, thus affuring opportunities for securing to the library at all times the great stacks would reveal as the free for the result of and exceptional opportunities to advertisers.
